Book signing to follow speaker's presentation

For twelve years, Allison Leotta was a federal prosecutor in Washington, D.C., where she specialized in sex crimes, domestic violence, and crimes against children. Drawing on this experience, she now writes legal thrillers, for which she's been dubbed "the female John Grisham." Her goal is for Grisham to be dubbed "the male Allison Leotta."

A graduate of Michigan State University and Harvard Law School, Allison lives outside of Washington, D.C., with her husband Michael Leotta and their two sons.
