April 11, 2022

The Michigan Historical Review is pleased to announce its 2022 Graduate Student Essay Contest. The MHR is the only scholarly history journal in the state, and we publish twice a year. The lucky student winner will not only receive publication in our journal but a $1000 cash prize as well. Today more than ever, those who seek college-level positions need to build a curriculum vitae that includes at least a measure of scholarly publication. This is a good chance for an aspiring historian to begin publishing.

Entries must be graduate-level papers that involve the history of Michigan in some manner and must include original research from primary sources. Papers should be no longer than 12,000 words, foot-noted, double-spaced, without the writer's name on any pages. A cover letter including the school program and supervisor's name must be included with the essay and e-mailed with it to review@hsmichigan.org no later than July 1, 2022. Members of our editorial board read the essays and provide each with a critique to assist in reshaping the essay into a more publishable form. In the case of entries that do not win, but show promise of being publishable after revision, we urge student authors to revise and resubmit for an additional double-blind reading. The process can be a very valuable experience for your students.

We greatly appreciate you bringing this invitation to the attention of your readers and look forward to seeing the essays. Certainly should you or your students have any questions regarding our journal, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Nathan
